

6026 - Does Islam Encourage Spending on Relatives?

the question

my father earns about 10 thousand riyals per month. we spend the least possible amount of money on our selves as my mom is trying to save money because one of my sisters has still to get married and me and my brother are still under education. my father's mother is a widow. she is living with one of her sons in her husband's house along with her three daughters (two unmarried and one widow). she is living a good standard of living (the same as we are enjoying over here). my father gives them some monthly allowance. my father's farm is under their (my uncle's) supervision and they get all the money from it. i want to know how much my father is supposed to give them monthly provided that they live very nicely and all his sisters and his mother have considerable amount of gold and separate land properties.

Summary of answer

Islam encourages spending on relatives, and in some cases, it is obligatory. Financial support is required for direct relatives—such as parents, grandparents, children, and grandchildren—if they are poor and the provider is able to afford it. For other relatives, it becomes obligatory if the spender is a legal heir and the relative is in need. Additionally, giving charity to relatives offers a double reward: charity and maintaining family ties.

Categories of Spending on Relatives in Islam

Spending on one's relatives may be divided into two categories:

- The first category is that which is called `Amuday An-Nasab (lit. the two pillars of lineage) i.e. the direct line of ascent and descent, no matter how far they reach. [This means parents, grandparents, great-grandparents etc., in the line of ascent, and children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, etc., in the line of descent - Translator].
- The second category is all other relatives apart from those in the direct line of ascent or descent. In cases where spending on them is obligatory, in addition to the two conditions mentioned above, there is a third condition: which is that the one who spends money should be a legal heir (according to shareeahShari`ah) of the person on whom he is spending, i.e. he can inherit from him. On this basis, if your father and paternal uncles are able to spend, then it is their duty to spend on your grandmother and paternal aunts.

Conditions for Obligatory Spending on Direct Relatives

Spending on them is obligatory when the following two conditions apply:

1. That the one on whom money is spent is poor and does not have anything or does not have enough, and is not able to earn a living.
2. That the one who is spending money can afford it and has enough, more than what he and his spouse need for their own sustenance.
3. There is also a third condition: that both parties should share the same religion (i.e., they should both be Muslims, for example).

The Virtue of Charity to Relatives

Do not forget the matter of kind treatment, for charity given to relatives is both charity and an upholding of kinship ties , and so it will bring two rewards. Do not forget what Allah says (interpretation of the meaning):

{...and whatsoever you spend (for the same of Allah) He will replace it. And He is the Best of providers.} [Saba' 34:39]

Spending on ones relatives, especially one's mother , is one of the greatest means by virtue of which Allah will send more provision and blessings, alongside the great reward which is with Allah, may He be glorified and exalted.

Encouraging Family Members to Spend Generously

So you should be happy that your father is spending on his mother and sisters, and you should encourage him to do that and compete with your uncles in doing this good deed.

How Much Should Be Spent on Relatives?

As for the amount of money to be spent, this is determined by the ability of the person who is spending and the needs of the people on whom he is spending. Allah says (interpretation of the meaning):

{They ask you (O Muhammad) what they should spend. Say: whatever you spend of good must be for parents and kindred and orphans and Al-Masakin (the poor) and wayfarers, and whatever you do of good deeds, truly, Allah knows it well.} [Al-Baqarah 2:215]
